I. General information about the State

A. Demographic, economic and social characteristics of the State

1. Demographic characteristics

1. Population dynamics in Mexico have reached an advanced transition stage marked by a shift from high to low birth and mortality rates. This phenomenon has been under way for at least thirty years, but has intensified significantly in the last decade. The decline in both fertility and mortality has contributed to an increase in life expectancy for the Mexican population, but has also led to progressive population ageing.

2. The current demographic situation in Mexico reflects significant changes in phenomena such as fertility, mortality and migration. According to data from the National Institute of Statistics and Geography (INEGI), over the past 65 years the population of Mexico has increased nearly fivefold. In 1950, the population stood at 25.8 million, and by 2015, it had risen to 119.5 million. Of this number, 61.5 million (51.4 per cent) were females and 58 million (48.6 per cent) were males.

3. The average annual population growth rate for the period 2005-2010 was 1.8 per cent, which was higher than in the previous five-year period, when the rate was 1 per cent. The figure for the period 2010-2015 was 1.4 per cent (INEGI 2015 intercensal survey).

4. An analysis of the population structure by age group shows that the 0-14 age group made up 34.1 per cent of the total national population in 2000; by 2010, the figure had fallen to 29.3 per cent. Persons 60 years of age or older accounted for 7.3 per cent of the total population in 2000; by 2010 the figure had risen to 9.1 per cent. In 2015 the 0-14 age group represented 27.4 per cent of the national population and persons 60 years or older represented 10.4 per cent (INEGI 2015 intercensal survey).

5. Between 2005 and 2010, the median age increased for both sexes, rising from 23 to 25 among men and from 25 to 26 among women. In 2015, the median age for both sexes was 27 years (2015 intercensal survey).

6. The federative entities with the highest proportions of children and adolescents in their respective populations are Chiapas (43 per cent), Guerrero (41 per cent), Aguascalientes (39.4 per cent) and Durango, Puebla and Oaxaca (each with 38.8 per cent). Those with the smallest proportions of minors in their respective populations are Mexico City (27.3 per cent), Nuevo León (34.6 per cent), Yucatán (34.8 per cent), Morelos (34.7 per cent) and Baja California Sur (35.3 per cent). In 2015, the federative entity with youngest population structure was Chiapas, with a median age of 23 years, whereas the one with the oldest population structure was Mexico City, with a median age of 33 years (2015 intercensal survey and 2015 Sociodemographic Panorama of Mexico).

7. Fertility is one of the variables affecting population structure. The average number of children born to Mexican women has been declining steadily for the past two decades. The total fertility rate fell from 3.2 children in 1992 to 2.21 in the three-year period 2011-2013. In terms of specific fertility rates, during the same three-year period, women aged 20-24 had the highest rate (126 live births per 1,000 women), followed by women aged 25-29 (113 births per 1,000 women (INEGI and National Population Council (CONAPO)).

8. The birth rate, meanwhile, has fallen more rapidly, owing largely to the increasingly widespread use of contraceptives. In 1990, the birth rate in Mexico was 27.9 births per 1,000 population; by 2006, the figure had dropped markedly, to 21.1, and by 2013, it had decreased to 19 per cent, a reduction of 31.9 per cent in relation to the 1990 rate and of 10 per cent in relation to the 2006 rate. In 2015, the birth rate fell to 18.5 per cent (CONAPO basic demographic indicators for 1990-2010 and population projections for 2010-2050).

9. Infant mortality is one of the main sociodemographic indicators reflecting the living conditions and level of socioeconomic development of a population. For the nation as a whole, this indicator decreased by 38.8 per cent between 2000 and 2013, falling from 20.9 deaths to 12.8 deaths per 1,000 births. The considerable decline in infant mortality in Mexico has been a major factor in the increase in life expectancy. In 2015, the infant mortality rate dropped to 12 deaths of children under the age of 1 year per 1,000 population (CONAPO population projections for 2010-2030).

10. The declines in general mortality and in infant mortality have been reflected mainly in increased life expectancy at birth. Between 1990 and 2013, average life expectancy among the Mexican population rose from 70.4 to 74.5 years, or a total of

4.1 years. Almost everywhere in the world, statistics on life expectancy disaggregated by sex show that women tend to outlive men. In the case of Mexico, in 2015 women lived on average 5.3 years longer than men (CONAPO population projections for 2010-2030).

11. In 2000, life expectancy at birth was 73.2 years (70.5 years for males and 76.1 for females); in 2013, the figure increased to 74.5 years on average (71.7 for males and 77.4 for females). In 2015, average life expectancy at birth increased to 74.9 years (72.3 years for males and 77.7 for females) (CONAPO population projections for 2010-2030).

12. Analysis of the age structure of mortality indicates a shift towards a higher proportion of deaths in the later stages of the life cycle. In early 2000, a total of 437,667 deaths were recorded: 244,302 males, 193,253 females and 112 persons of unspecified gender. In 2015, a total of 655,688 deaths were recorded: 363,732 males, 291,637 females and 319 persons of unspecified gender (INEGI mortality statistics).

13. The mortality rates for 2000 and 2010 were estimated, respectively, at 5.1 and 5.6 deaths per 1,000 population, while for 2013, 2014 and 2015, the rate was 5.7 (CONAPO population projections for 2010-2030).

14. The recent trends in fertility and mortality, in addition to affecting the growth and age structure of the population, explain the gradual ageing of the population that the country is experiencing.

15. Migration is another of the demographic factors contributing to changes in the size, structure and geographic distribution of the population. It is a major phenomenon in Mexico in terms of both movement of people within the country and continuous and growing outward migration, particularly to the United States of America.

16. The number of persons migrating to the United States decreased from 751,000 to 376,000 per year between 2007 and 2010, a reduction of 50 per cent over a three-year period. According to the National Survey of Demographic Dynamics (ENADID), from 2009 to 2014, the net loss of population as a result of international migration was 391,000 persons.

22. According to the National Occupation and Employment Survey (ENOE), the economically active population accounted for 59.7 per cent of the total population in 2015.

23. In 2016, 96 per cent of the economically active population overall was employed (96.1 per cent of males and 95.8 per cent of females within this population). The proportion of the economically non-active population available for work was 15.4 per cent (18 per cent of males and 14.5 per cent of females within this population) (INEGI-ENOE).

3. Social characteristics

Households and housing

24. According to the 2010 population and housing census carried out by INEGI, there were 28,607,568 inhabited private dwellings,¹ with an average of 3.9 persons per dwelling. With regard to housing conditions, 86.9 per cent of the inhabited dwellings had walls constructed of solid materials, 6.2 per cent had a dirt floor, 88.7 per cent had piped water and 98.3 per cent had electricity. In 2015, there were 31,949,709 private dwellings with an average of 3.7 inhabitants. In terms of housing conditions, 3.6 per cent of these dwellings had a dirt floor, 94.5 per cent had piped water, 93.2 per cent had drainage and 98.7 per cent had electricity (Sociodemographic Panorama of Mexico, 2010 and 2015; INEGI 2015 intercensal survey (basic data sets)).

25. According to INEGI data, the number of Mexican households counted in the 2010 census² totalled 28.2 million, 21.2 million of which were headed by men and the remaining 6.9 million by women. Of all households, 64 per cent were nuclear households, 24 per cent were extended households, 1 per cent composite households, 1 per cent co-resident households and 9 per cent one-person households (INEGI).³ In 2015, there were a total of 31.95 million households; of these, 28.39 million were family homes.⁴ Of the total number of households, 22.68 million were headed by men and 9.26 million by women (2015 intercensal survey).

² A household is defined as a unit consisting of one or more persons who may or may not be related by kinship and who habitually reside in the same private dwelling.

⁴ A non-family household is a household whose members are not related to one another or a person living alone.

Health

26. Between 2010 and 2015, the percentage of persons among the total population who reported that they were affiliated with or eligible to receive benefits from a health-care scheme rose from 64.6 per cent to 82.2 per cent. There are now 98.2 million persons who are covered by some type of health-care scheme.

27. In 2011, males accounted for 56.31 per cent of all deaths, while females accounted for only 43.9 per cent. While that signified a slight change in relation to the figures for 2007 (males 55.38 per cent and females 44.58 per cent), a marked pattern of excess male mortality persists (INEGI). In 2015, a total of 655,688 deaths were registered; of these, 363,732 were of males, 291,637 of women and 319 of persons of unspecified gender (INEGI).

28. Among children under 1 year of age, mortality rates remain high for certain conditions originating in the perinatal period, especially respiratory distress in newborns and other respiratory disorders originating in the perinatal period, while among preschool-age children, rates remain high for accidents, congenital malformations of the circulatory system, pneumonia and influenza. The main causes of death among children 5 to 14 years of age are motor-vehicle traffic accidents and leukaemia (Ministry of Health).

29. Another area that should be highlighted is the effort being made to prevent high mortality from motor-vehicle accidents and violence among adolescents and young people. Moreover, significant measures have been taken to prevent infectious and parasitic diseases among men between the ages of 25 and 44, including HIV/AIDS (human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome), which has created new challenges for the Mexican health system.

30. Diseases of the digestive system are becoming increasingly frequent in Mexico, especially among men aged 45 and over and among older adults. These diseases include cirrhosis and other liver diseases, which are closely correlated with the consumption of alcoholic beverages (CONAPO).

31. Pursuant to agreement 5 of the thirtieth regular session of the National Council for Public Security (CNSP), held on 30 June 2011, a group was created to formulate proposals regarding addiction and educational alternatives for young people, the aim being to encourage the federal and state governments to adopt common goals for the prevention and treatment of addiction and to facilitate young people's enrolment in secondary and upper-level secondary education and their integration into the labour market.

Education

32. In 2015, the illiteracy rate among persons 15 years of age or older was 5.5 per cent overall, 2.1 per cent among males and 3.4 per cent among females. The absolute number of illiterate persons was 4,749,057, which is 6.9 per cent fewer than in 2010, when the number was 5,393,665 (2015 intercensal survey). The following tables show key figures for the national education system.

33. In 2015, the average number of years of education completed by persons 15 years or older was 9.1 years (9.3 for males and 9.0 for females). This represents an increase in relation to the figure for 2010, when the average number of years of education completed was 8.6 (8.8 for males and 8.5 for females) (2015 intercensal survey).

34. The Mexican education budget increased from 519,023,000,000 Mexican pesos in 2007 to 623,814,220,000 pesos in 2014, of which 384,616,850,000 were allocated to basic education, 84,302,740,000 to upper-level secondary education and 109,822,620,000 to higher education. The remainder was allocated to other educational services. In 2015, 648,139,400,000 pesos were allocated to education.⁵

35. A key indicator of how many children and young people are in school is the net school enrolment rate, which compares the number of students who are at the typical age for enrolling in a particular level of education with the total number of persons in that age group, thus indicating the proportion of the official school-age population that is effectively receiving education. According to Ministry of Education estimates, for the 2014-2015 academic year, the net enrolment rate at the primary level was 94.9 per cent of the population between the ages of 3 and 14 years, while the rate at the upper-secondary level was 57 per cent of the population between the ages of 15 and 17 years. An analysis of the net school enrolment rate by sex reveals the extent to which parity has been achieved. At the primary level, the rate for females was 95.7 per cent and that for males was 94 per cent, while at the upper-secondary level, the rate for females was 58.5 per cent and the rate for males was 55.5 per cent.

Poverty and inequality

36. Between 2012 and 2014, the number of people living in poverty increased from 53.3 million to 55.3 million.

37. The original allocation for poverty alleviation programmes in 2014 was 2,670,500,000 pesos. Between January and December of that year, expenditures totalled 2,654,800,000 million pesos, which represents an absolute annual variation of -15.7 per cent with respect to the original amount for the year.⁶

38. Pursuant to the General Act on Social Development, poverty is measured on the basis of two main criteria: (a) household income and (b) social deprivation with respect to education, health care, access to social security, quality and size of housing, access to basic services in housing, access to food; and social cohesion. A decline in the number of people falling into the poorest decile contributed to the reduction of extreme poverty. The figures on poverty and extreme poverty between 2012 and 2014 are largely attributable to changes in income, social deprivation and demographics.

39. Between 2012 and 2014, the number of persons living in poverty increased by 2 million, from 53.3 million to 55.3 million. During the same period, the number of persons living in extreme poverty fell from 11.5 million (9.8 per cent of the total population) to 11.4 million (9.5 per cent of the total population).

B. Constitutional, political and legal structure of the State

40. The Constitution establishes that the United Mexican States is a representative, democratic and federal republic composed of 31 states and Mexico City, formerly the Federal District, which is the seat of the federal Government. Each state is free, sovereign and autonomous and has its own constitution.

41. The powers of the federal Government are divided between the executive, legislative and judicial branches. The same separation of powers exists at the local level.

1. Executive branch

42. The President of the Republic heads the executive branch of government and is elected for a six-year term by direct vote of the population over the age of 18. The President chooses his or her own cabinet, which currently comprises 18 ministers (including 3 women) and the Attorney General of the Republic.

2. Legislative branch

43. The legislative branch is made up of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. The Chamber of Deputies has 500 members, 300 of whom are elected by direct suffrage and 200 by proportional representation. Deputies are elected for a three-year term and may not seek re-election. The Senate has 128 members: 64 from the majority party, 32 from the leading minority party and 32 representing other parties in proportion to their share of the national vote. Each state is represented by three senators, as is Mexico City (96 senators in total). Senators are elected every six years.

3. Judicial branch

44. The federal judiciary is composed of the Supreme Court of Justice, the Electoral Tribunal, multi-judge and single-judge circuit courts, district courts and the Council of the Federal Judiciary. The Supreme Court has 11 justices (2 of whom are women) and meets in plenary or in chambers.

4. Relations with civil society organizations

45. In Mexico, civil society organizations are recognized under the Federal Act to Promote the Activities of Civil Society Organizations, published in the Official Gazette on 9 February 2004.⁷

46. The National Institute of Social Development is the federal authority responsible for implementing the Act, although the Act itself entrusts other federal administrative agencies and entities with certain functions in relation to the promotion of the activities of civil society organizations, which is viewed as a cross-cutting undertaking for the Government as a whole, not an isolated function of a particular institution. One of the mandates established by the Act is the creation of the Federal Registry of Civil Society Organizations, which serves as a source of reliable information about the number of such organizations operating in Mexico and about their activities.

47. The National Institute of Older Persons is supported by a citizens' council and the Inter-Agency Coordination Council on Older Persons, which aims to follow up on programmes, solicit proposals from the public regarding older persons and submit them to the Executive Board, so that they can be taken into consideration in public policies designed to promote healthy ageing.

5. Incidence of crime and administration of justice

48. Accurate information on victimization is essential in order to estimate the number of crimes committed in a specific geographic area during a given period, which will in turn make it possible to estimate the "dark number" of crimes that go unreported or undiscovered and provide input for additional situation assessments to support the design of strategies and policies aimed at reducing threats to public safety.

49. Quantitative data and qualitative information on crime rates and the consequences and impact of crime on society are necessary to begin identifying specific mechanisms and measures to address the problem. Crime reports at the national level fell from 1,707,441 in 2010 to 1,511,292 in 2015 (Executive Secretariat of the National Public Security System).

6. National prison system

50. The federal prison system has 21 detention centres, including 15 social rehabilitation centres,⁸ 1 psychosocial rehabilitation centre, and the Islas Marias complex, which includes 4 more centres.⁹

51. Under the Federal Criminal Code, a prison sentence consists of deprivation of physical liberty. It lasts for a period ranging from 3 days to 60 years, and an additional penalty extending the term of imprisonment may be imposed only when an inmate has committed a new crime while incarcerated. The sentence is to be served in the prisons or other institutions or places designated for that purpose by law or by the authority responsible for enforcing the penalty, in keeping with the judgment rendered.

7. Public perceptions regarding security

52. The National Survey of Victimization and Perception of Public Safety conducted by INEGI in 2016 indicated that 11.4 million households (34 per cent) had at least one member who had been the victim of a crime in 2015; there were estimated to have been 23.3 million crime victims. In March and April 2015, when the survey was conducted, 72 per cent of respondents reported feeling unsafe.

⁸ One of these, Federal Social Rehabilitation Centre No. 16, "CPS Morelos", is exclusively for women.

INEGI. National Survey of Victimization and Perception of Public Safety, 2016. National Statistical and Geographical Information System. Information of National Interest.

53. Criminals have diversified their modi operandi, which has enabled them to circumvent the prevention and prosecution capabilities of the institutions responsible for public safety in the country. The Mexican State is therefore of the view that inter-agency and intergovernmental work and coordinated action by authorities of the federal Government, the states, Mexico City (formerly the Federal District) and the municipalities are the backbone of public policy aimed at ensuring the security expected by Mexican society.

54. On 2 January 2013, a decree amending, supplementing and repealing several regulations of the federal administration was published in the Official Gazette. As a result of these changes, the Ministry of Public Security was dissolved, and its powers were transferred to the Ministry of the Interior through the establishment of the National Security Commission.

55. Mexico has a unified criminal information system that enables the police to access criminal information and records stored in the databases of the police forces and other institutions and organizations involved in public safety. The country's 32 federative entities have access to the unified system, which contains data from police records, judicial and ministerial orders, driving licences, the Public Vehicle Registry, records on stolen and recovered vehicles, prison records, firearm registration records, and fingerprint and voice records, among other sources.

II. General framework for the protection and promotion of human rights

A. Acceptance of international human rights norms

56. Mexico is a party to the nine core international human rights instruments and six of their optional protocols.¹⁰ It also recognizes the competence of the human rights treaty bodies to receive individual complaints and communications¹¹ and to conduct investigations.¹² Mexico complies with its obligation to submit periodic reports and has sought to respond appropriately to the observations and recommendations made by the treaty bodies. Mexico is also a party to other relevant instruments concerning international humanitarian law, refugees, stateless persons, international criminal law and the right to work, and to various conventions of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

57. It is likewise a party to the main inter-American human rights instruments, and in 1998 it accepted the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. Mexico takes part in legal actions filed within the inter-American system, favouring amicable settlements, while also offering victims additional avenues of redress. It has also taken steps to put in place an effective system of protective and interim measures at the federal and state levels.

¹⁰ Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (concerning individual communications); Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty; Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women on individual communications and the methods of examining them; Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment on a system of regular visits undertaken by independent international and national bodies to places where people are deprived of their liberty; Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict; Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography.

¹¹ The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination; the Human Rights Committee; the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women; the Committee against Torture; the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities; the Committee on Enforced Disappearances and the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families.

(6) Visit by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Ms. Mary Robinson (2 December 2000), on the occasion of the signing of the technical cooperation agreement with Mexico.

65. Similarly, many international NGOs have visited Mexico: Amnesty International (August 2007, September 2008, January and June 2009 and February 2014); Article 19 (2013); an international mission for the documentation of attacks against journalists and the media (April 2008); Human Rights Committee of the Bar of England and Wales (November 2009); Peace Brigades International (November 2010); Committee to Protect Journalists (June 2008 and September 2010); Human Rights Watch (February 2008, April and October 2009, February and December 2010 and November 2011); Consejo General de la Abogacía Española (General Council of Spanish Lawyers) (October 2009); Nobel Women's Initiative (February 2010 and November 2014); Inter-American Press Association (March 2007 and September 2010); and Comisión Civil Internacional de Observación por los Derechos Humanos (International Civil Commission for Human Rights) (February 2008), among others.

66. In 2002, at the invitation of the Government, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights established an office in Mexico. The Office's contributions have included an assessment of the human rights situation in Mexico in 2003 and advisory support for the development of the National Human Rights Programme 2008-2012. The Office maintains agreements and extensive contacts with the executive, legislative and judicial branches, as well as with state governments, academic institutions and civil society organizations.

67. The International Committee of the Red Cross set up an office in Mexico in 1998; it became a regional office in 2002.

68. In the Human Rights Council and the United Nations General Assembly, Mexico promotes the highest international human rights standards, encourages participation by civil society organizations and supports gender mainstreaming. It puts forward initiatives on the human rights of migrants, persons with disabilities and indigenous peoples and on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the context of counter-terrorism activities, the elimination of discrimination against women, birth registration, the right to be recognized as a person before the law and, recently, on combating the bullying of and violence against children.

69. The Government of Mexico recognized the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights through a decree published in the Official Gazette on 24 February 1999. Hence, Mexico recognizes as fully and legally binding the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court in matters relating to the interpretation or application of the American Convention on Human Rights.

B. Legal framework for the protection of human rights at the national level

70. The Government of Mexico is firmly convinced that the consolidation of democracy hinges on recognition and unconditional respect for human rights as the only way to achieve comprehensive development and genuine well-being for every individual and for society as a whole.

71. Mexico has an extensive legal and institutional framework for the protection of human rights, which has evolved and become stronger as a result of a national and international social dynamic characterized by growing dialogue between civil society and the Government. This has, over the last decade, led to greater collective and individual awareness of the importance of promoting, protecting and ensuring respect for human rights.

72. The Mexican Government has placed human rights on its domestic and international public agenda. It thus launched a process of significant change in the country's political life, which has led to considerable progress with respect to the legal and institutional framework for the protection of human rights.

73. In the last decade, the Constitution¹³ has been amended a number of times to respond to the population's needs. Key amendments during the period include, in chronological order: reform of the juvenile justice system (art. 18, 2005);¹⁴ abolition of the death penalty (art. 22, 2005);¹⁵ establishment of the foundations and principles for the exercise of the right of access to information (art. 6, 2007); recognition of the right to protection of personal information (art. 16, 2009);¹⁶ the introduction of reparation mechanisms (art. 17, 2010);¹⁷ the establishment of the offence of trafficking in persons (art. 19, 2010);¹⁸ establishment of the principle that the State must act in the best interests of the child (art. 4, 2011);¹⁹ recognition of the right to food (art. 4, 2011)²⁰ and of the State's responsibility to ensure the right to water and a healthy environment (art. 4, 2011);²¹ the extension of free and compulsory basic education to include upper secondary school (art. 3, 2012);²² the addition of offences that undermine the right to information or freedom of expression and of the press to the ordinary offences dealt with by the federal authorities (art. 73);²³ establishment of the institutional basis for ensuring high-quality education (art. 3, 2013);²⁴ explicit recognition of the universal right to an identity and to be registered at birth (art. 4, 2014);²⁵ increase of the minimum working age from 14 to 15 years (art. 123, 2014);²⁶ recognition of the right of indigenous women and men to vote and to be elected on an equal basis and their right to access and hold public or elected office (art. 2, 2015);²⁷ and authorization of Congress to adopt general laws establishing offences and penalties in relation to enforced disappearance, other forms of deprivation of liberty and torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (art. 73, 2015).²⁸

74. Three major constitutional amendments are worthy of particular note for their positive impact on human rights: the reform of the public safety and criminal justice systems (2008), the reform of amparo proceedings (2011) and human rights reform (2011). The gradual implementation of these reforms will lead to significant progress in aligning domestic law with international human rights law.

75. These constitutional amendments and legislative advances are a significant first step in what will undoubtedly be a long process that will require profound changes in the structure and operations of the State apparatus. Nevertheless, while the advances in strengthening the legal framework for the protection of human rights in Mexico should be celebrated as a triumph achieved through the efforts of both government and civil society, continued progress will require joint effort and cooperation by all stakeholders.

76. A human rights reform published in the Official Gazette on 18 June 2008 laid the groundwork for the establishment of a new criminal justice system in Mexico, one in which the rights of both victims or injured parties and the accused are respected, thereby strengthening due process. Under this constitutional reform, the deadline for implementing the new adversarial criminal justice system throughout the country was 18 June 2016.

77. Thanks to the coordination and joint effort of authorities at the three levels of government, the new model for security and for the administration and delivery of justice has become operational throughout the country within the allotted time. It provides Mexicans with a more transparent and efficient justice system, staffed by skilled professionals, which will ensure due process and respect for human rights. One of the keys to the achievement of this institutional transformation is the police force at the three levels of government. The implementation of the adversarial criminal justice system has brought to the fore the role of the police as first responders, or in other words as the first authority to handle a potential offence and to be in contact with the public as part of efforts to protect people's rights. Police officers are thus the first link in the chain of criminal proceedings aimed at ensuring effective justice.

78. In this context, federal, state and municipal institutions have made the commitment to ensure that every police officer has the skills and abilities required under the National Code of Criminal Procedure and the Constitution.

79. The reform launched a transition from an inquisitorial criminal justice system to an adversarial one with oral trials. Such a shift calls for acceptance of the principle that an accused person is presumed to be innocent until he or she has been found guilty by judgment of the court hearing the case. Other changes include: recognizing the right of the accused to choose to make a statement or to remain silent and prohibiting all incommunicado detention, intimidation and torture; establishing the inadmissibility of any confession made without the assistance of legal counsel and any evidence obtained in violation of the fundamental rights of the accused; ensuring a prompt trial, in accordance with the nature of the offence; establishing the defendant's right to, and the State's obligation to ensure, an adequate defence; recognizing the right of the accused to be tried in open court; limiting the time the accused can be held in pre-charge detention (arraigo); appointing supervisory judges; defining the concept of flagrante delicto; establishing the requirement that prosecutors must obtain search warrants from a judicial authority; and regulating private communications. In addition, the reform adopted in 2008 provided for alternative dispute resolution mechanisms in criminal matters, established rules regarding reparation in criminal matters, transformed the social rehabilitation system and established the principle that punishment must be in proportion to the crime or the legally protected interest in question.

80. The National Act on Alternative Dispute Settlement Mechanisms in Criminal Matters, which requires the Attorney General's Office to establish a body specialized in alternative dispute settlement mechanisms in criminal matters, was published in the Official Gazette on 29 December 2014. Pursuant to the Act, a draft agreement on the establishment of the specialized body was developed between January and March 2015, and on 15 January 2016 the agreement establishing the decentralized administrative body specializing in alternative dispute settlement mechanisms in criminal matters was published in the Official Gazette. On 21 August 2015, the National Conference of State Attorneys General adopted guidelines for the training, evaluation, certification and recertification of facilitators of the bodies specializing in alternative dispute settlement mechanisms in criminal matters within judicial institutions at the federal and state levels.

81. In order to harmonize the rights of persons involved in criminal proceedings nationwide, on 8 October 2013, Congress was given the authority to enact a single set of laws on criminal procedure, alternative dispute settlement mechanisms, sentence enforcement and juvenile criminal justice²⁹ applicable throughout the country in federal and ordinary courts.

82. As mentioned above, another example of legislative progress in the area of human rights is the reform of the constitutional provisions relating to amparo proceedings through the new Amparo Act. This reform, published in the Official Gazette on 6 June 2011, introduced amendments to articles 94, 103, 104 and 107. Its importance lies in the changes made to the scope of the protection provided under the writ of amparo, which previously was limited to the protection of individual rights but now encompasses the human rights enshrined in the Constitution and all relevant international instruments to which Mexico is a party. The reform also paves the way for collective amparo actions, since it extends protection to people other than those directly affected by replacing the current requirement of a “legal interest” (a direct, personal interest) in order to institute amparo proceedings with a requirement of a “legitimate interest” (individual or collective legal interest).

83. As a result of this reform, in most cases amparo actions will now apply generally to anyone meeting certain criteria and will not be restricted to the party instituting the action. The reform envisages that a writ of amparo can be used to protect people against general rules, acts or omissions by public authorities or private parties, regardless of whether the action is filed individually or jointly by two or more people, thus developing the concept of collective interest, which is fundamental to the effective protection of social rights. The reform also provides for sanctions to ensure more effective enforcement of judgments, including the removal or criminal prosecution of an official or authority who fails to comply with an amparo decision.

84. Moreover, the amparo reform establishes that the Congress must introduce any necessary amendments to secondary legislation arising from the constitutional reform within four months of its publication in the Official Gazette. The aim of this reform is to ensure that all members of society are able to benefit from the administration of justice and constitutional protections and to strengthen the capacity of judicial institutions to protect and uphold the human rights enshrined in the Constitution and in international instruments. The Supreme Court hears constitutional challenges and unconstitutionality actions.

85. The constitutional reform enacted on 10 June 2011 represents an important advance with respect to human rights and clearly demonstrates the State’s respect for and recognition of these rights. The reform introduced amendments to articles 1, 3, 11, 15, 18, 29, 33, 89 and 102 of the Constitution.

86. Title 1 of the Constitution, which concerns human rights, establishes that all persons under the jurisdiction of the State are entitled to full enjoyment of the human rights recognized by the Constitution and by the international human rights treaties to which Mexico is a party. The reform mandates the inclusion of human rights in public education and establishes the obligation of the authorities to promote, respect, protect and uphold those rights.

87. The reform regulates the restriction of human rights, prohibits their suspension and establishes the rights that may not be restricted under any circumstances. It also amends the constitutional provisions concerning the rights of non-nationals, establishing that they shall enjoy the rights granted to them by the Constitution, including the right of asylum and the right to a hearing before the executive branch may exercise its power to expel them.

88. Lastly, the constitutional reform affords protection to agencies working to protect human rights. Mexican authorities must now disclose their reasons for failing, in a particular situation, to follow the recommendations issued by such agencies. Similarly, each state must ensure that its human rights agencies have budgetary autonomy, legal personality and their own resources. Additionally, the reform envisages participation by society in the election of the members of the National Human Rights Commission, which is empowered to investigate, when deemed appropriate or when requested by the executive branch, acts potentially constituting serious violations of human rights.

89. The National Human Rights Commission, established in 1990, has “A” status and is in line with the Paris Principles. An additional 32 human rights institutions have been set up in the federative entities and the Federal District (now Mexico City). The constitutional amendments in the field of human rights in 2011 enhanced the autonomy of the public human rights bodies of the federative entities by requiring local legislatures to ensure that these bodies enjoy administrative and budgetary autonomy, legal personality and their own resources.

90. One noteworthy legislative change is the publication in March 2014 of the National Code of Criminal Procedure, which repealed the 33 codes that had previously been in force in the country and that had established different rules for criminal proceedings. The Code will apply nationwide, thus harmonizing criminal procedure rules. Also of note are the various amendments to the Federal Criminal Code, including one adopted in 2013, which gave the federal executive branch the authority to grant pardons for any federal or ordinary offence committed in Mexico City when there is solid evidence of serious violations of the human rights of the convicted person. Of particular interest is the amendment of August 2010, which broadened the scope of compensation for violations of the freedom of personal development, personal freedom and normal psychosexual development. It also ruled out the possibility of parole for persons convicted of corruption, pornography, sex tourism, paedophilia and procuring for prostitution involving persons under 18 years of age, and it classified corruption, pornography, sex tourism, paedophilia and procuring for prostitution involving persons under 18 years of age as serious crimes.

91. A decree amending article 73 of the Constitution was published in the Official Gazette in October 2013. It empowers the federal authorities to try offences under ordinary law when they are linked to federal crimes or offences committed against journalists, or other persons or facilities, that affect, limit or impair the right to information or freedom of opinion and expression

92. The rights enumerated in the Constitution have been fully incorporated into the constitutions of the country’s 32 federative entities, either through a clause expressly incorporating federal constitutional rights or right conferred by international treaties or through an extensive list of recognized rights. A number of challenges remain, however, with regard to the harmonization of the provisions of state constitutions and legislation on human rights.

93. The death penalty was abolished in 2005 through amendments to articles 14 (2) and 22 (1) of the Constitution. The death penalty has not been applied in Mexico since 1961, and as part of the strengthening of human rights, on 16 April 2004 the Senate adopted an amendment removing it from the Code of Military Justice. In 2007, Mexico deposited its instrument of ratification of the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted in New York on 15 December 1989, which establishes the commitment of States parties to the Protocol not to execute any person under their jurisdiction and to take all necessary measures to abolish the death penalty in their jurisdiction.

C. Legal framework for the protection of human rights at the national level

94. Major achievements made in response to observations and recommendations include the constitutional amendments relating to human rights introduced in 2011. These amendments fully incorporated the concept of human rights into the Constitution and gave constitutional status to the human rights enshrined in international treaties to which Mexico is a party. They reflect the obligation of the State to prevent and investigate human rights violations, to punish the perpetrators of such violations and to provide redress. They also establish the obligation of the authorities to promote, respect, protect and uphold these rights.

95. As part of the 2011 constitutional reform of amparo proceedings, the rights system and access to justice were expanded. The reform introduced the concept of legitimate interest, whereby any person who considers his or her rights to have been violated may petition for a writ of amparo and protection in federal court, without having to demonstrate that he or she has legal standing in the matter. It also made the remedy of amparo available in cases of omission by the authorities or the infringement of collective interests, and it empowered the Supreme Court to issue generally applicable rulings of unconstitutionality when a given law has been held to be unconstitutional in more than one court decision.

D. Reporting process at the national level

96. Under goal 1 (“Mexico at Peace”) of the National Development Plan 2013-2018, which the federal administration is required to implement, one of the priority objectives of the Government is to develop a State policy on human rights that ensures that all authorities commit themselves to respecting and safeguarding human rights as a daily practice.

97. As part of its efforts to strengthen respect for human rights in the country, the Government published the National Human Rights Programme 2014-2018 in the Official Gazette of 30 April 2014. The Programme was developed following an inclusive consultation process in connection with which a network of 45 agencies and institutions of the federal administration was set up and consultations were held with civil society. This work formed the basis for the creation of an advisory task force.

98. The National Human Rights Programme includes an assessment of the issues, causes and effects related to the human rights situation in Mexico and sets out five objectives comprising strategies, lines of action, indicators and targets. The objectives are to: (i) ensure the effective implementation of the constitutional reform in the area of human rights; (ii) prevent human rights violations; (iii) guarantee the exercise and enjoyment of human rights; (iv) strengthen the protection of human rights; and (v) ensure good coordination among the actors involved in the State policy on human rights.

99. Implementation of the Programme is mandatory for all agencies of the federal administration within their areas of responsibility. The Ministry of the Interior is responsible for periodically assessing the progress made under the Programme, the results achieved and the Programme’s impact on the achievement of the objectives of the National Development Plan. This obligation extends to semi-public entities, which are coordinated by the Ministry in accordance with applicable legal provisions.

100. The Commission on Government Policy on Human Rights was established on 11 March 2003 to coordinate the activities of the entities and agencies of the federal administration with regard to human rights at the national and international levels. The Commission is a standing body that serves as a forum for dialogue between federal agencies and civil society organizations for the formulation of public policies on human rights.

101. At a meeting on 18 December 2008, the members of the Commission agreed to establish the Subcommittee for Monitoring and Evaluation of the National Human Rights Programme. The Subcommittee comprises four working groups — which are responsible for monitoring and evaluating work undertaken in respect of each of the Programme's objectives — and a technical group. The Subcommittee was formally established on 29 January 2009 and is made up of 38 federal government institutions and 25 civil society organizations.³⁰

102. In addition, the Federal Institute for Access to Public Information was established in 2003 to ensure universal access to public information and to foster a culture of transparency and accountability in public affairs.

E. Reporting process at the national level

103. Mexico has always complied with the guidelines for reporting to the treaty bodies of the United Nations in keeping with its obligations as a State party to the various international instruments which it has signed and ratified.

104. The lead agency in the subject area concerned has primary responsibility for producing the country's report to the respective treaty body, although the Ministry of Foreign Affairs plays a supporting role in compiling the reports and in some circumstances functions as the lead agency, such as, for example, in the case of the reports to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to the Human Rights Council for the universal periodic review process.

III. Information on non-discrimination and equality

105. For the Government of Mexico, protection and promotion of the human rights of individuals and, especially, the elimination of all forms of discrimination are priorities.

106. Mexico has signed and ratified the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. The Convention was adopted and opened for signature and ratification by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 21 December 1965. In accordance with its article 19, the Convention entered into force on 4 January 1969. Mexico signed it on 1 November 1966 and ratified it on 20 February 1975.

107. On 16 September 1996, Mexico accepted the amendments to article 8 of the Convention, adopted on 15 January 1992 during the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention.

108. Mexico has recognized the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination under the procedure referred to in article 14 of the Convention. The decree approving its declaration to that effect was published in the Official Gazette on 17 January 2002.

109. To date, the Government of Mexico has duly submitted all its periodic reports on implementation of the Convention. The most recent were the combined sixteenth and seventeenth periodic reports, submitted in June 2010 and reviewed in February 2012.

110. The fight against discrimination is an essential aspect of the effort to consolidate democracy in Mexico. Accordingly, the Government has promoted legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures in order to address the discrimination that is acknowledged to exist in the country. The purpose of the legislative reforms against discrimination introduced to date has been to put in place protection mechanisms designed to eliminate long-standing forms of discrimination and at the same time to prevent and neutralize the negative effects of more recent events and issues. Mexican law prohibits all forms and manifestations of discrimination, including racial discrimination and xenophobia.

111. An amendment to article 1 of the Constitution, published on 14 August 2001, added a third paragraph containing a clause prohibiting discrimination on grounds of ethnic or national origin, sex, age, disability, social status, health status, religion, opinions, preferences, marital status or any other form of discrimination that might undermine human dignity or seek to nullify or impair the rights and freedoms of individuals. The aim of this amendment is to protect and compensate all individuals and groups who, because of some type of prejudice or structural condition, have been placed at a disadvantage.

112. On 26 November 2002, the federal Government proposed the Federal Act to Prevent and Eliminate Discrimination, which was adopted unanimously and published in the Official Gazette on 11 June 2003. This Act gave rise to the establishment of the National Council for the Prevention of Discrimination (CONAPRED), which formally came into being on 27 March 2004, as the federal agency responsible for implementing non-discrimination policy throughout the country. In 2014, significant amendments were introduced in order to enhance protection of the right to non-discrimination in relation to complaints procedures, equality measures, the duties of the three branches of government, reparation measures and other matters.

113. The Federal Act to Prevent and Eliminate Discrimination contains provisions aimed at preventing and eliminating all forms of discrimination and promoting equality of opportunity and treatment. It also lists the conduct considered to be discriminatory and sets out the equalizing, inclusion and affirmative action measures that should be taken by federal authorities and the institutions under their oversight or jurisdiction in order to ensure universal enjoyment of true equality of opportunity and the right to non-discrimination. On 20 May 2014, a decree amending, supplementing and repealing various provisions of the Act was published in the Official Gazette. The amendments harmonized the complaints procedure with a view to ensuring consistency in the actions taken in response to discriminatory acts committed by public servants and private citizens. They also introduced new provisions to strengthen the legal framework for equality and non-discrimination.

114. The Act defines discrimination as any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference, committed by act or omission, with or without intent, which is not objective, rational or proportional and whose purpose or effect is to hinder, restrict, prevent, impair or nullify the recognition, enjoyment or exercise of human rights and freedoms on one or more of the following grounds: ethnic or national origin; skin colour; sex; gender; age; disability; social, economic, health or legal status; religion; physical appearance; genetic traits; migration status; pregnancy; language; opinions; sexual preferences; political identification or affiliation; marital status; family situation; family responsibilities; criminal record; or any other characteristic. Homophobia, misogyny, any form of xenophobia, racial segregation, anti-Semitism, racial discrimination and other related forms of intolerance are also considered discrimination.

115. Other recent legislation has reaffirmed the principles of non-discrimination set forth in the Constitution and the Act.

116. Following the addition of article 1 (3) to the Constitution in 2001, a number of federative entities have amended their constitutions to expressly prohibit discrimination or establish the right to equality.

117. Currently 31 federative entities have anti-discrimination laws³¹ and 25 expressly prohibit discrimination in their constitutions.

Chapter 3 of the Federal Act to Prevent and Eliminate Discrimination details the State's duties with regard to ensuring equal opportunities for specific vulnerable groups.
