The session marked the first of a series focused on providing psychosocial support and strengthening skills in client service for female-headed microenterprises.

3 UNHCR delivered canes, walkers, and wheelchairs during a brigade with the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Culture to 40 older people from indigenous and afro-descendent communities in La Union department. The Support Space's mobile brigades accompanied the activity and provided information and orientation on access to rights and services.

Protect

UNHCR coordinated a week of work with the head of information and analysis of the Global Protection Cluster, the information managers of the Protection Sector and the areas of responsibility for child protection and gender-based violence. During the workshop, participants received training on the humanitarian architecture and coordination mechanisms to respond to gender-based violence in the country.

Stories from the field

The power of giving back to your community

UNHCR recently renovated a community centre that serves eleven communities exposed to violence in Santa Ana department. The intervention facilitates a safe area to attend learning, cultural and recreational activities. Volunteers have been key to ensure the success of this centre.

"We have the support of the majority in the community and if we continue this way, I believe that it will improve much more" said Eduardo, a volunteer that teaches English to a group of twenty children. "We are promoting opportunities for our children, developing them for a better future and I think there is going to be a big generational change. The children have more interaction with others, there is greater harmony, and they help each other more through the different projects that are being carried out in the community centre," added Eduardo. As many members in his community, Eduardo understands the power of giving back and improving conditions for new generations. He is currently studying a career specializing in education with a special focus on children. "If they find a leader who motivates them, who helps them, they improve their self-esteem, they think about the future, and about studying a profession, because they have found a person who supports them." Since the community centre got renovated, everyone has pitched in helping to maintain it nice and clean. The centre currently has 58 volunteers that help run the centre and give workshops on origami, piñata making, and paper flower arrangements among others. "When I came, they told me that this community was not very active, it did not support much, but now the community has practically integrated itself into the various activities, it has been quite supportive. For example, for the inauguration of the centre, there were around 70 people supporting with cleaning and organizing." Shared Yesica, the community centre coordinator supported by Santa Ana's Mayor's Office. In addition, thanks to the equipment donated by UNHCR the centre hosts INSAFORP certified technical careers such as cooking, bakery, and computing.
